“ My deepest condolences go out to you. It's hard to find the right words. I am struggling. I am in Germany watching your brave film about what happened to Collin. As a mum of three boys, the youngest just turned 18, I can only thank you for it, to raise awareness and to never stop loving our kids. I am so sorry and angry that your son was put under such pressure. I spoke a prayer and he is remembered and in one more heart now. Kind regards, Astrid

“ I did not know your son and have not met your family, but I am so truly sorry for your devastating and tragic loss. I've read Collin's obituary and was sincerely impressed by his accomplishment and by the tremendous love and pride you obviously had for him. As the mother of two teenagers, I still honestly cannot fathom the grief you must be awash in. I lost my father in September, and while I am no expert in overcoming loss, I do know that time makes the weight of grief somewhat easier to carry. I wish you all peace, strength and resilience in your time of horrific grief. I hope, in time, you can find solace in the many wonderful memories you shared with Collin. He was obviously an exceptional young man.
