“ I must have been around the age of 8 maybe 9 and I had just gotten done punching my eldest sister in the stomach to which made her cry in pain and sent her running to find mom. Well, I remember feeling proud of myself for beating up my older sister until fate and my mom (never call her mother) caught up with me. She was not pleased with what I had done obviously and proceeded to enforce her wrath with swats to my buttocks. In reality it didn't hurt as I was a custom to my older brothers beating the crap out of me. Somehow this was different with mom doing the punishment the whole time yelling at me " dont you ever hit a girl in the stomach." Well I was crying and sobbing due to the fact I had made mom mad but during this time being the smartass that I was and still am, able to utter out the infamous line "so where do you hit a girl, mom ." This question only provided my mom with more intense punishment and also provided joyful laughter to my fellow siblings. In the end I was still proud of myself for beating up my older sister. I miss you mom dearly it's been 7 yrs now and the letters are becoming blurred due to the tears. You were a hoot, and will be forever remembered love, Jeffrey Paul.
