“ I know I'm not great with words but.

Today I officially said goodbye to the woman that for better or for worse formed who I am at my core; whos love and sternness made it's way through so many generations and countless children, grandchildren, great grandchildren and great great grandchildren lol. Grandma no matter how distant I became and how badly I struggled mentally always showed me the most indiscriminate form of love. She was there when I wanted to vent when I wanted to celebrate and when I just wanted company.

Grandma was the one who helped fixed my car when I couldn't afford to. Grandma was the one who always said she was proud of me no matter how small the accomplishment.

She was the one who always accepted me with open arms no matter how long it had been since my last visit, because she understood that life gets in the way sometimes.

Grandma and Grandpa are the reason I was raised the way I was and why I'm so willing to love and give when I can. They always taught everyone that you should give when you can because others don't deserve to starve because of your judgement. Or at least that's what I understood lol.

Grandma I miss you so dearly but I am so happy to have gotten to know you and love you and I am proud to say that I am your great grandson

I hope that in whatever afterlife there may be that you know we're all proud of you and love you.

Here's to 89 years of life.

Rest Easy because you deserve it.

“ GG was one of the kindest people that anyone could know. She always made me feel included and welcomed in everything she did. She really made me feel like one of her grandchildren and she always gave me such sound advice about life. I loved her so much and I'll miss her even more
