“ Hey Nick, I love you man and I thank you for saving my ass many times... I remember one weekend a bunch of us guys went skiing up to Buffalo, New York. We had a blast and I never laughed so hard in my life all weeknd. One of the nights while we were there I got into a fight over wearing my full length fur coat into the local night club, in this little town and it turned into a huge brawl. The local guys there had me pinned down on the dance floor why other locals were hitting me in my face. Out of no where, here came Nick... Superman! Flying through the air and tackling everyone. The fight moved on out into the streets with a snow blizzard going full force. Needless to say it wasn't the type of evening that we had planed after a full day of snow skiing. We spent the night in the local hospital getting Nick's eye put back in the socket. Hahaha We would laugh, and laugh about it every time I would see him after that. Sure going to miss you Nick. You were always a big brother to me my man and always had my back. Rest In Peace My Brother.

“ A good friend who shared the same interests in life and cigars as myself. I remember the times we sat in cigar lounges in Cincinnati and Columbus talking about starting a business together and retiring to SC. Your positive attitude will never be forgotten my friend.

“ Nick, we met only 5-6 years ago but in that short time we developed a very good friendship. The days we spent working for Home Depot in Cincy will always be a special memory. Watching football, smoking cigars, and talking about how to close a deal. You always had my best interest in mind and helped me become very successful in my H.D. venture. Truly a gentleman that cared so much about your family and friends. Never heard a bad word from anyone who knew you. May you bask in the glory of Christ and be with all your loved ones. I'm sure your father was delighted to see his son. God bless you and your family. Love and miss you Nick.

“ Nick was one of those guys who lifted you up when times were tuff, I'll never forget a football at South that we should have won, it ended in a tie and I felt I could have won the game for us. My head was down and my spirit was low, Nick came up to me and said We are a team, No one person wins or lose the game, it's a team game, Thanks Nick for making a better person as well as a teammate out of me.. peace and nothing but love my friend

“ Nick, our friendship began in High school and traveled a long distance. Many ups and downs, but we survived. I sit here thinking of all the crazy things we got into and the laughter we shared as well as the pain we endured. You will always be here in my thoughts and memories of a time passed. You made me a better person for knowing you. ??? my friend.
