“ To my loving fiancé' William A Durbin. It's your birthday baby Sunday August 7th, 2011 and six months since you've been gone on the 11th. I think about you every day and I miss you so much! These months that have gone by without you I have realized so much what you had taught me, what you've taught your close friends, and about how you really loved your son's. Deep down you really just wanted people to accept you for who you were but you did not know how to show it other than to pretend what you wanted to be like that other imaginary person. But this is not your fault it was just the way your life was at an early age and you did not know any better. You just did not know how to overcome your disappointment about yourself and your life choices. This did not mean that you were this bad awful person because that was not you. You were so..so intelligent, you had a charisma and great demeanor about you that was unstoppable, you cared about strangers so much you would of gave them your last dollar if you had it and you loved to strike up a conversation with them, you were very complimentary and expressive, you were a storm teacher to your friends and you loved them dearly, you were a great cook, you were a jack of all trades, a lover, my best friend, and I thought of you as a life partner and more. You were compassionate about your son's. You told everybody about your son's, Ricky, Zack, Michael, and Jeffrey. You mentioned their names and memories you had with them all the time. You did not forget those memories because I cannot count the times you mentioned to me how much you loved them. You cried about them because I believe deep down you regretted throughout the years that your time was lost and you wanted to be closer to them. You didn't have to say anything to me as I know you were thinking about them everyday like you said and that you did love them deeply with your unconditional love. With this next year journey I will hope and pray that we can forgive, and really think about how worth life really is to us. It is precious in every way. “Is it really worth it to worry about something you can accomplish today?” Bill would say. It's not worth the argument and the unkindness we sometimes give each other. Life is too short and you have to be thankful for the things we have in life now. You are giving me the strength to go on in my life and I know you want the best for me and our families. God Bless you Bill. You talk to me every day and I really think you are my angel in disguise. You are out there soaring and surfing the storms baby keeping track of your storm buddies. If I know you are watching all of us every day, keeping us safe. I love you in my heart and my soul always. Love, Snuggles. Amy, Fuzzy Britches and Cashmere too.
